

Westerly No-License Committee Busy

Determined That, Whatever the Vote, the Laws Shall Be Enforced—Funeral of Mrs. Jonathan Maxson—Galluccio Case Continued One Week—Court Lenient With Frank Marno, Well-Meaning But Mistaken Witness.

The Westerly no-license committee is holding frequent meetings in the Memorial building, and has assumed that the laws will not be enforced during the election. The committee is endeavoring to get data to substantiate the assumption for presentation to the people before election day, which the members expect to conduct with an official statement of the members of the town council that the liquor laws will be enforced during the ensuing year, with a guarantee that should the town vote no license no intoxicating liquors will be sold in the town of Westerly.

It has been declared by a member of the committee that all the members of the present council are not advocates of no-license, and that therefore an effort will be made in the selection of the next council to put none but no-license men on guard. The committee said it was the intention to make the liquor license question a political issue and that candidates for office would be required by the committee to announce their position on the liquor license question before receiving political recognition.

At a recent meeting of the committee, Honore E. Burdick, a former member of the town council and for several years the leading spirit of the police committee, was asked to give his views on the matter. He was asked to give his views on the matter. He was asked to give his views on the matter. He was asked to give his views on the matter.

At the funeral of Matilda Madama Wilcox Maxson, widow of Jonathan Maxson, held at her residence in Elm street, Friday afternoon, the service was conducted by Rev. Clayton A. Burdick, pastor of the Seventh Day Baptist church, assisted by Samuel H. Davis, a former pastor. Miss Emma Langworthy sang very effectively. The bearers were three sons, Henry M. Maxson of Plainfield, N. J., Albertus W. Maxson and three grandsons of deceased, Albertus R. Maxson, J. Irving Maxson, Jr., and Howard Gwin.

When the case of Charles Galluccio, charged with assault with a dangerous weapon upon John Oltmar, was called for trial in the Third district court on Friday morning Judge John W. Sweeney, counsel for the accused, asked for a continuance to Friday of next week, as he was not prepared to proceed with the case, having been engaged in other matters during the week. Town Solicitor Harry H. Agard was opposed to continuance for so long a period, stating that the case had been postponed for the experience has been that the delays are prejudicial to the state's attorney, by reason of the disappearance of witnesses of importance. Judge Williams decided to grant the request for continuance.

Then Solicitor Agard announced that several witnesses who were summoned into court, including the complaining witness, did not respond to the summons, and he suggested that the case be dismissed. Judge Williams, however, decided to continue the case until 4 o'clock in the afternoon and to give to understand the meaning of legal summons. Mr. Agard wanted something done that would warrant the attendance of these witnesses next Friday morning. Judge Williams agreed with Solicitor Agard and court took a recess until 4 o'clock.

The assault occurred in Police street on Saturday night, and Galluccio is accused of stabbing Oltmar in the left side, causing an incise wound in the lung and another cut in the groin. Galluccio was promptly arrested and released on bonds.

When the court came in at 4 o'clock Frank Marno, one of the witnesses who failed to answer the summons, was presented. In response to the question by Judge Williams as to why he did not appear in court at the morning session, he said that Charles Galluccio, the accused, who is out on bonds, told him that it was not necessary to go to court, as the case would not be tried until Oltmar got better. Galluccio told him there was not need of his going to court, as none of the other witnesses were going. Marno said he then went to work at the Smith Granite Works. Just as soon as he heard that he had made a mistake he hurried to find Chief Brown and was held by that officer.

Marno said he was married, had two children living on Pond street and owned six lots in Central Park. He regretted his action, which was caused through ignorance of the importance of the summons.

Judge Williams explained that the penalty for failure to obey the summons was a fine of $10 and costs, but that honesty and thrift of Marno he would not impose any part of the penalty, but issued a warning that in the future those summoned to court must respond or take the consequences.

Town Solicitor Agard expressed satisfaction with the court's action, believing that the present action would bring some people to a realization that the law must be obeyed. Marno was summoned to be in court at 9 o'clock next Friday morning. He responded: "I'll be there, you bet, when the clock strikes!"

Car Strikes Wagon.
A collision between the G. and S. trolley car due here from Westerly at 2:12 p. m. and the delivery wagon of H. A. Muller occurred on Elm street Thursday. The horse and wagon were left standing across the trolley track in front of the home of C. A. Koeb.

The car came down the hill, the trolleyman applied the brakes, but the wet leaves on the rails made the car slide along. C. E. Davis saw a collision was coming and pulled the horse up on to the sidewalk, but the wagon was turned over. The car dragged it and three lights of glass in the car were broken and the side of the car scraped.
